

A DISAPPOINTED ROBBER

CHOICE MISCELLANY

Japan's Smart Set.

Japan's Smart Set. The smart set in Japan are very well. The Japanese are very fond of their own customs and of those of other countries. At the same time they wish to gain the favor of the world, and to do this they must keep the customs of the land well. In their hearts the Japanese do hate the west, though they are sharp enough to see that no nation which does not wear trousers can be a great power. So in Japan there are two smart sets, the breezed and the unbreezed, and as there are many Japanese who practice several religions so are there many who live two lives.

The official smart set, the set which employs ambassadors and cabinet ministers and politicians and civil servants generally, wear trousers in public. But follow home the drummer, field marshal or pompos courtier, and within five minutes you will find him minus breeches or knee breeches and comfortably enveloped in a kimono, probably squatting on the floor. The Japanese who wear European dress do not like to wear it. On the contrary, they are anxious to be rid of it as is a fat woman of her stays.

Those who know the court only would imagine Japan to be far more foreignized than it really is. The great politicians and a few other great noblemen live in foreign houses, use foreign furniture, give dinner parties in the foreign style, eat with knives and forks, sit on chairs and dress like Christians in Sunday attire. Then, as I have said, the emperor requires that European dress be worn at his garden parties, of which he has at least two every year, a cherry blossom party and a chrysanthemum party.—Smart Set.

Spanish Wizardry.

Madrid society is just now enchanted with the details of a case of magic. The practitioner is a woman whose specialty was "removing" by incantation persons in whose disappearance her clients were interested. High dames of the aristocracy resorted to her in the dead of night for blood curdling rites, such as "black masses," conjuring up the devil, who appeared as a black billy goat with flamboyant horns, and in a general way the witch played old Harry at stiff rates. During her incantations a wax figure was used to represent the obnoxious person.

Some of her dupes at last complained of the high fees paid for magically small results, and a detective's wife was sent to have her husband conjured away. All went amazingly well, but just at the awful moment, when the enchantress was busy with a Hecate's brew of bacon fat and other ingredients, with a shirt of the doomed man steeped in them, the police burst in. Next day "the devil" was found quietly browsing in the garden, and it has since been ascertained that the "flamboyant horns" were the result of phosphorous treatment.—London Globe.

Antiquity of Looping the Loop.

There is nothing new under the sun. That apparently up to date method of illustrating centrifugal force known as "looping the loop" was practiced, it seems, as long ago as the first half of the last century. A French journal ascribes its invention to M. Clavier of Havre. At first the car that did the "looping" bore nothing but bags of sand, but soon a passenger made the venture, and in 1850 the sport was a prominent feature of the performance at the Paris Hippodrome. Apparently, however, it was reserved for this country to throw the sport open to the public, as was done at Coney Island, and later to produce a performer daring enough to make the trip on a bicycle.

In spite of this long record the feasibility of the loop trip with a car running on rails was denied several years ago in a technical journal on the ground that the necessary initial speed could not be obtained.—London Globe.

"Well, we'll take a look around. Aunt Mary is a good soul, but she ought to put her money where it won't tempt anybody. There were two suspicious characters hanging around the village this afternoon, and I heard that they came in this direction."

I didn't question his being the sheriff, and I didn't dispute his right to take charge of the money. I had no idea where the box was hidden, however, if there was a box, and so I could make no suggestions. The man entered the sitting room, and I followed. Five minutes exhausted the search in that room, even to pulling up the rug carpet on the floor and upsetting the lounge. There were but few places in any room in the house where anything like a tin box could be hidden.

In the parlor he simply gazed around, speaking very kindly to me all the while, but in the three bedrooms he made a close inspection of beds, bureaus and chests. In the course of half an hour he satisfied himself that the box was not on the first floor. There was a half story above, and he searched that and on descending the man began to growl and curse and finally said to me:

"Boy, we must find that box! I believe you know where it is hidden. If you don't out with it at once I'll slice off your ears with my knife!"

He was so fierce about it that I told him I thought it was buried in the cellar. He ordered me to find a spade, and as he went down the cellar I carried a candle in either hand to light the way. The bottom of the cellar was not concreted and a part of the wall was formed of planks.

While I held the lights the man dug here and there or pulled down the bins and rolled the barrels about. I expected every minute he would find the box, for I had got the idea that it was down there, but after a long hour's search nothing was revealed.

Then Mr. Holt's patience gave out, and he showed himself in his true colors, though I had come to the conclusion that he was a robber. Seizing me by the arm and brandishing a wicked looking knife before my eyes, he swore he would murder me if I did not reveal the exact hiding place. Had I known it I should most certainly have told him, but I did not know, and he was probably satisfied of the fact.

He wasn't willing to let me off altogether or thought he could continue the search without me. He turned and struck me a blow on the temple with his fist that rendered me unconscious, and when my senses returned I was tied hand and foot and lying on the cellar bottom. I heard him walking around on the floor above for a long time, but it was long after daylight before I dared move. I worked the cords loose after awhile, and it was just 8 o'clock when I crept upstairs and ran outdoors to give the alarm.

Aunt Mary came home at midafternoon to find half a dozen neighbors at the house and everything turned topsy turvy. The real sheriff had been there and heard my story and gone in pursuit, but "Mr. Holt" had got such a long start that he was not captured. He was no doubt a bad man and a professional robber, but he had had his labor for his pains in trying to rob our house.

Where do you suppose that money was all the time? Not in a box at all, and neither down cellar nor upstairs, but in a bag and hanging to the poles in the kitchen along with bunches of sweetweed and rings of pumpkin. The man was within reaching distance of it twenty times over.

"Inh, I am Mr. Holt, the county sheriff. As I know that your Aunt Mary went away this afternoon I have called to see if that money of hers is all right. With you here above the house could easily be robbed."

"I don't know anything about the money, sir," I replied, wondering how the man could have learned that it was in the house.

"But Aunt Mary didn't take a tin box with her, did she?"

"I didn't see her have any."

"Then it's here in the house, of course, and I will take charge of it. I suppose you know where she keeps it?"

"No, sir, I don't."

MRS. CECILIA STOWE,
Orator, Entre Nous Club.

176 Warren Avenue,
Chicago, Ill., Oct. 22, 1902.
For nearly four years I suffered from ovarian troubles. The doctor insisted on an operation as the only way to get well. I, however, strongly objected to an operation. My husband felt disheartened as well as I, for home with a sick woman is a disconsolate place at best. A friendly druggist advised him to get a bottle of Wine of Cardui for me to try, and he did so. I began to improve in a few days and my recovery was very rapid. Within eighteen weeks I was another being.

Mrs. Stowe's letter shows every woman how a home is saddened by female weakness and how completely Wine of Cardui cures that sickness and brings health and happiness again. Do not go on suffering. Go to your druggist today and secure a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui.

The grip bacillus is the smallest microbe yet discovered which affects man. It is but 0.4 of a micron broad and two to three times as long. The limit to visibility with the most powerful microscope is 0.2 of a micron, which is the size of the microbe of the pneumonia of cattle; 0.2 is one one hundred and twenty-five thousandths of an inch.

An analysis of the cases of consumption in Marburg, Germany, showed that four-fifths of those affected belong to the poorest fifth of the population. It was further found that 34 per cent of all the cases occurred in 2.6 per cent of the entire 1,503 dwellings in the city, while 50.2 per cent of all the cases among the poor occurred in 33.6 per cent of the houses occupied by them.

The development of the carbonium industry led to the manufacture of artificial graphite, which is now produced by passing the amorphous carbon through the electric furnace and obtaining a pure graphite with merely a fraction of 1 per cent of ash. Even the direct graphitization of anthracite coals has been successfully accomplished, a granular graphite being obtained which can be extensively used for lubricating purposes. The annual output is more than 2,000,000 pounds.

Extra Session of Congress.

President Roosevelt yesterday issued a call for an extra session of Congress. The object of the session is to act on the Cuban treaty. The president will convene congress on the 9th of November. There has been a great deal of speculation as to whether the president would convene congress in an extra session.

Cemetery Association News.

The season's work of the Cemetery Association has closed and the work there is a good example of how much good can be done by united efforts and by small contribution on the part of everyone concerned. It was a fact generally recognized that our cemetery was a neglected place. About the first of May this year a Cemetery association was formed which conceived the idea that the cemetery and lots could be beautified and a man kept there during the spring, summer and fall provided enough persons could be induced to join and each paying $1.00 per lot. Many persons thought this was too small an amount but this plan was adopted and with the aid of a little extra contribution this method has proven a great success and worked a marvelous change on the appearance of the grounds.

Two men were employed in the spring and one man for the whole season. The work done consisted of keeping the grass cut on the lots, of the care of the plants. At spare moments a great deal of the grubbed out, wild grass and weeds were killed and the trees were trimmed. Mr. F. J. Wood also did a great deal which added to the general appearance of the grounds by cleaning up and taking care of the unsold property.

We would suggest that this work continue and that lot owners should inspect the work which certainly will make them enthusiastic to continue and induce others to join the association. Such united effort will make our cemetery one of which citizens can be justly proud.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS

Surprised the Women.—The members of the Woman's Relief Corps was given a pleasant surprise on Saturday evening by the members of the G. A. R. Post. The ladies of the Corps had assembled at the home of Mrs. George W. Baker by invitation, and when all was in readiness the members of the post sent a detail to escort them to the G. A. R. hall where a very pleasant evening was spent. There was a program consisting of vocal and instrumental music, readings and speeches and very nice refreshments were served.

Working on Church.—A gang of men commenced the work of enlarging the Congregational church on Monday morning and should the weather be all favorable work will be completed in a short while. The auditorium of the church will be enlarged so as to increase the seating capacity considerably and a furnace will be installed. After this is done the interior of the building will be decorated in a neat tasty manner, and it is expected that there will be a great improvement.

A Narrow Escape.—Burt Murray, who is employed by the Consolidated people, fell into the water at the Buckskin Chute on Friday while assisting in sinking a crib. The water was very swift but owing to the fact that he was a good swimmer he managed to catch hold of a rock where he remained safely until rescued by his companions. It was a narrow escape and might easily have resulted seriously.

Rode on Sidewalk.—Irving Henry was arrested on Thursday for riding his bicycle on the sidewalk and being taken before Justice Cooper had to pay a fine of $4.45. For some time past there has been very little attention paid to the ordinance forbidding riding on the sidewalks and numerous complaints have been made to the police who say they will hereafter prosecute all cases that come to their notice.

Soon to Start up.—W. A. Dawes has been engaged for some time past in placing his shoe making machinery in the building he recently rented near the Pioneer Pulp company's office, and he expects to have the same in operation in the near future. W. H. Ashton of Denver arrived in the city last Saturday and he will assist Mr. Dawes in the manufacture of shoes.

Buildings Purchased.—Only two of the buildings at the old grist mill site were sold on Saturday, Andrew King buying the barn for forty dollars and W. H. Brown the office for forty-two dollars. A sale will be held again next Saturday when an attempt will be made to dispose of the mill building.

A Goodly Addition.—Seventeen new members were taken into the Congregational church last Sunday

Dr. W. P. Roberts, field secretary for the Wisconsin Health Park association, was in this city for a few hours on Monday, being on his way to Tomahawk where the association have located their health park.

Dr. Roberts has been in the southern part of the state for some time past soliciting aid for his association and reports that he has met with good success. The doctor was in this city the latter part of July, at which time a synopsis of the proposed work of the association was given.

The association was organized for the purpose of giving the consumptives of Wisconsin a chance to be treated by what might be termed the fresh air method. There are 1,200 deaths annually from consumption in the state of Wisconsin and it is Dr. Roberts' opinion that at least 50 percent of this number could be saved if they were all given the chance to be treated by the method proposed by the Wisconsin Health Park association.

The association has 240 acres of land at Tomahawk of which about 12 acres have been cleared and the work will be carried on as rapidly as possible. Dr. Roberts is enthusiastic on the proposition of curing consumptives by outdoor treatment, having been cured himself by this method some forty years ago, and it is his opinion that a great deal of good can be accomplished when once the health park is got in operation. Any person wishing information concerning the park can get it by putting themselves in communication with Dr. Roberts, whose permanent address is Janesville, Wis.

The New Arabian Nights

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

As soon as Dr. Noel perceived the dead man in the bed his face darkened, and, hurrying back to the door which he had left when he hastily closed and double-locked it.

"Up!" he cried, addressing Silas in stentorian tones. "This is no time for weeping. What have you done? How came this body in your room? Speak freely to me, who may be helpful. Do you imagine I would ruin you? Do you think this pose of dead flesh on your pillow can alter in any degree the sympathy with which you have inspired me? Creditors, youth, the horror with which time and unjust law regards an action never attaches to the door in the eyes of those who have him, and it is the friend of my heart return to me out of signs of blood he would be in no way changed in my affection. Raise yourself!" he said. "Good and ill are a chimera. There is nothing in life except destiny, and, however you may be query and help to fix the guilt more certainly upon your imbecile."

"I can then rest indeed!" cried Silas.

"I have not said so," answered Dr. Noel, "for I am a cautious man."

"But look at this," objected Silas, pointing to the body. "Here is this object in my bed, not to be explained, not to be disposed of, not to be regarded without horror."

"Ho-ho!" replied the doctor. "No. When this sort of clock has run down, it is no more to me than an ingenious piece of mechanism, to be investigated with the bistouri. When blood is once cold and stagnant, it is no longer human blood. When flesh is once dead, it is no longer the flesh which we desire in our loves and respect in our friends. The grace, the attraction and the terror have all gone from it with the animating spirit. Accustom yourself to look upon it with composure, for if my ears between the covers and a dead or alive."

"Now?" said the doctor, "the first step is done, then on the way to your deliverance. To-morrow, or rather to-night, or to-morrow, or to-night, the soul of your porter, pay him all that you owe, while you may trust me to make the arrangements necessary to a safe conclusion. Meanwhile, follow me to my room where I shall give you a safe and powerful agent for whatever you do, you must have rest."

The next day was the longest in Silas's memory. It seemed as if it would never be done. He denied himself to his friends and sat in a corner with his eyes fixed upon the Saratoga trunk in dismal contemplation. His own former indiscretions were now returned upon him in kind, for the observatory had been once more opened, and he was conscious of an almost continual study from Mine Zephyrine's apartment. So distressing did this become that he was at last obliged to block up the spy hole from his own side, and when he was thus secured from observation he spent a considerable portion of his time in contrite tears and prayer.

Late in the evening Dr. Noel entered the room carrying in his hand a pair of sealed envelopes without address, one somewhat bulky and the other so slim as to seem without inclosure.

"Silas," he said, seating himself at the table, "the time has now come for me to explain my plan for your salvation. Tomorrow morning, at an early hour, Prince Florizel of Bohemia returns to London, after having diverted himself for a few days with the Parisian carnival. It was my fortune, a good while ago, to do Colonel Geraldine, his master of the horse, one of those services, so common in my profession, which are never forgotten upon either side. I have no need to explain to you the nature of the obligation under which he was laid; suffice it to say that I know him ready to serve me in any practicable manner. Now, it was necessary for you to gain London with your trunk unopened. To this the custom house seemed to oppose a fatal difficulty, but I thought me that the baggage of so considerable a person as the prince is, as a matter of courtesy, passed without examination by the officers of custom. I applied to Colonel Geraldine and succeeded in obtaining a favorable answer. Tomorrow, if you go before 6 to the hotel where the prince lodges, your baggage will be passed over as a part of his, and you yourself will make the journey as a member of his suite."

"It is probable enough, for the prince loves to mix with all societies," replied the doctor. "Once arrived in London," he pursued, "your task is nearly ended. In this more bulky envelope I have given you a letter which I dare not address, but in the other you will find the designation of the house to which you must carry it along with your box, which will there be taken from you and not trouble you any more."

"Alas," said Silas, "I have every wish to believe you, but how is it possible? You open up to me a bright prospect, but I ask you, is my mind capable of receiving so unlikely a solution? Be more generous and let me further understand your meaning."

The doctor seemed painfully impressed.

"Boy," he answered, "you do not know how hard a thing you ask of me. But be it so. I am now inured to humiliation, and it would be strange if I refused this after having granted you so much. Know, then, that although I now make so quiet an appearance—frugal, solitary, addicted to study—when I was younger my name was once a rallying cry among the most astute and dangerous spirits of London, and while I was outwardly an object for respect and consideration my true power resided in the most secret, terrible and criminal relations. It is to one of the persons who then obeyed me that I now address myself to deliver you from your burden. They were men of many different nations and dexterities, all bound together by a formidable oath and working to the same purposes. The trade of the association was in murder, and I who speak to you, innocent as I appear, was the chieftain of this redoubtable crew."

"What?" cried Silas. "A murderer? And one with whom murder was a trade? Can I take your hand? Ought I so much as to accept your services? Dark and criminal old man, would you make an accomplice of my youth and my distress?"

The doctor bitterly laughed.

"You are difficult to please, Mr. Seudanore," said he, "but I now offer you your choice of company between the murdered man and the murderer. If your conscience is too nice to accept my aid, say so, and I will immediately leave you. Thereforward you can deal with your trunk and its belongings as best suits your upright conscience."

"I own myself wrong," replied Silas. "I should have renounced how generously you offered to shield me, even before I had convinced you of my innocence, and I continue to listen to your counsels with gratitude."

"That is well," returned the doctor, "and I perceive you are beginning to learn some of the lessons of experience."

"At the same time," resumed the New Engander, "as you confess yourself accustomed to this treacherous business and the people to whom you recommend me are your own former associates and friends, could you not yourself undertake the transport of the box and rid me of once its detested presence?"

"Assuredly not," replied the doctor. "From what I see already of the machination in which you have been involved your case is desperate upon that side, and for the narrow eye of the authorities you are infallibly the guilty person. And remember that we only know a portion of the plot, and the same infamous contrivances have doubtless arranged many other circumstances which would be elicited by a police investigation. What you propose to do is to get away as quickly as possible. The bisecting tendency of our criminals is generally recognized, and this is the case. Whence the tree carries but a single burden or trunk we might naturally expect each of extra size and quality. Singularly with us, the opposite is the case."

On visiting a "Duchess" tree in our home orchard that on the bearing year as a rule is loaded with fine fruit we found a mosty showing of miserable specimens, gnarled and shrivelled, all recognition. A singular feature of the oil year is the proportion of stony, distorted and wormy fruit to the sum total. This is as large as ten comparatively worthless, to one perfect specimen, instead the latter are exceptionally rare. Of wormy fruit where the trees are neglected and no spraying is done, the actual amount of wormy apples may be greater than on the oil year, but they are not noticed in the abundant supply. In the bearing years, however, the amount of fruit affected by the apple gonger is less. Why this should be so we do not know. The reason is too deep for our philosophy, unless that with so big a job in sight on the bearing year, the prospect is discouraging and the villain with the stiletto furtively to stab the young growing fruit.

Gathering.

First, as to the time of gathering, and just here we would urge upon our readers, the advisability of early picking in preference to late. There is the obvious fact that much will be thus saved that would otherwise be windfalls. An early start in picking allows opportunity of going over the trees repeatedly, selecting first with care the more advanced and mature specimens. The stepladder should be brought into use and the hand picking done carefully. Careless handling and the use of the ordinary ladder would thresh off more than is gathered. As mentioned in a previous article, the tree relieved of part of its burden is free to concentrate upon the rest, thus by two or three pickings a much finer crop is secured in both quality and size.

There is yet this further reason for early gathering. Fruit left to ripen on the tree does not keep well, the tendency is to become overripe and decay. Hence it is a rule with our commercial orchardists, so soon as the fruit is sufficiently colored up, to commence picking. While it is generally admitted that the apple is king of all the fruits, yet it is astonishing how little pains many of our farmers bestow upon gathering it. It is frequently the case that they are shaken off the tree, gathered in heaps, a part to be fed to the stock, a part goes to the cider mill, and what are considered the best are dumped into barrels for winter keeping. As a rule before winter sets in they are played out from premature decay, occasioned by the method of handling. There is a temporary surplus, a short lived enjoyment, and then except what may be purchased for some special occasion, the family use of the apple is over.

Now, this might be easily remedied. Instead of a fall feast and a winter famine, let us have a winter's supply. This is well within the reach of every farmer who has an orchard where a part of the trees are of varieties known as winter apples—those which, maturing late, are long keepers. If the farmer's orchard has been well selected at the start, with a due proportion of winter varieties, such as the Willow Twig, the Walbridge, and the Golden Russet, he has the right material to begin with, for it should be understood that under ordinary conditions a fall apple will not prove a winter keeper.

Selection.

The nit becomes a matter of gathering, selection and storing. In gathering, let it be careful hand picking—what is worth doing should be done well. Second the bruised, the wormy, the inferior and speckled should be rejected. The old adage of what one rotten apple does for its neighbors in the barrel should be remembered. The fruit that should grace your table and furnish enjoyment on winter evenings, when the snows are drifting and the windows rattle with the wind without, should be of the finest specimens of the stored sunlight and dews of summer.

Storage.

This brings us to the matter of storage. If barrels are your choice, use a small sized measure or basket that you can fit down readily to the bottom in filling, and do not fill it too full, so as to spill its contents until carefully poured out. Too often the filling is carelessly or thoughtlessly done, the fruit dumped in so that those first poured in are bruised by the fall. These soon decay and communicate the rot to the rest, and the farmer wonders why his apples don't keep.

With careful handling and the barrel properly headed up, in which process the fruit is pressed down firmly to prevent the rattling in the barrel when moved, the barrel may make a good package. We would suggest a box about the size of the common cracker box. We mention this because it furnishes a clean package. The apple readily absorbs a taint. A drop of kerosene let fall upon an apple ruins it for eating—we have tested this unpleasantly. When a box is used the apples can and should be placed in by hand, and if choice and designed for special use and long keeping each apple should be wrapped in tissue paper like an orange. Place a layer of paper on top, nail the cover down, mark the name of the variety on the box, and the boxes may be piled away for winter.—Milwaukee Wis.

Broke Into His House.

S. Le Quinn of Cavendish, Vt., was robbed of his customary health by invasion of Chronic Constipation. When Dr. King's New Life Pills broke into his house, his trouble was arrested and now he's entirely cured. They're guaranteed to cure, 25c, at John E. Daly's Drug Store.

A. Winter of York County, Me., last year Mr. Winter shipped several large barrels of barrels of barrels to Europe, where they are used for stuffing pillows, and are considered superior to feathers for this purpose. Carriers are gathered in the field and must be carefully handled in order to dry them perfectly, and prevent heating, as that spoils them, and they often have to be handled over twice a day. The down is packed in barrels with a heavy press, and an ordinary down barrel will hold 23 pounds net. Mr. Winter says regarding his operation:

"I usually go to any place where they grow in plenty, first get permission of the owners of the land on which they grow, to gather them, then hire as many men as the quantity to be gathered will warrant, and set them to work. I always oversee myself. Two years ago I gathered at Saybrook Junction, Ct., about ten tons. I employed about 20 men. Last year I gathered in Maine. There were none there the year before. —Orange Judd Farmer."

Important If True

The agricultural department is inquiring into the statement of Consul General Richard Guenther that a new plant has been discovered in South America which promises to supplant the sugar cane and the sugar beet. Scientifically the plant is known as the Eupatorium rebaudum, and it contains a large amount of saccharine matter and a high percentage of natural sugar properties which are easy to extract. According to Mr. Guenther, a lump the size of a pea will sufficiently sweeten a cup of coffee.

A HOSPITAL FOR SICK WATCHES

A fall causes many a watch to stop. The delicate staffs, jewels and pivots can not withstand such a shock, and snap right off. Should this occur to your watch it will be profitable for you to have us look at your watch at once. Every watchmaker can't fix a sick watch—he must be a skilled mechanic to effect a permanent cure.

the tray on to his neighbor who how-

"No, thank you; I have already eaten

A lady in a costly machinery shop was walking in a street in Vienna the other day when she saw a beggar woman with three children, one of them a child of two, sitting at the foot of a manager. She sent a street porter to ask if she would give up the child. The woman madded, whereupon the lady in black walked up to her, gave her some bank notes and took the child to a store. Half an hour later she emerged with the same child elegantly dressed, hired a cab and drove away.

Away back when the big Mammoth cave in Kentucky was discovered, the first task to explore the depths of it was to find a suitable guide to the cave was a slave named Lewis.

One day it was observed that there were two entrances to the cave. This caused the two guides from visitors would be divided, as the two entrances were in different states. The man who owned the one entrance, the man in which it was and the guide Lewis was quietly told one day by the old man that he had discovered the second entrance to the cave. Lewis' owner at once told him he would give him his freedom if he would show him and another man the second mouth to the cave.

Lewis agreed to do the job. One morning the slave entered the mouth of the cave—the present entrance, by the way. The arrangement was that the owner and another man were to remain on guard and see that the old slave did not come out the way he had gone in. Ten hours later old Lewis proved that there was another entrance to the cave. He had used it as an exit and come to his owner over the hills. That night three men are said to have silently effaced this entrance, and although it is known in the neighborhood of the Mammoth cave that it did exist, no man has to this day been able to find it, so there is only one entrance to the wonderful cave.

Years rolled on. Lewis died. He was made free, but he would not leave the cave. He explored it fully and knew more of its mysteries and beauties than any other soul. Then he was buried in the old cemetery up near the hotel.

Now for the ghost story. A new manager took hold of the cave and the hotel there. He heard about old Lewis and his wonderful history. So he concluded it would be a good idea to dig up the old fellow's bones, reinter them at the mouth of the cave and erect a tall white marble monument over them sacred to the memory of the first guide to the cave.

When the old man's grave was opened, the negroes down there say, his widow went down into the pit and gathered up the fragments of bone and placed them in the new coffin. Then they were placed in the new grave at the mouth of the cave, and the monument was erected over them.

One night in the summer a few years ago a party of men and women, six in number, came out of the cave at 9 o'clock. They looked at the big monument and talked about old Lewis. Then they told the guide to go out to the hotel. They were in no hurry and would linger about the mouth of the cave. An hour and a half later they started to go to the hotel.

They had gone but a few steps when,

a few yards in front, they saw a man.

He was dressed in a white shirt and dark trousers and wore no hat. One of the men remarked casually that the guide had been loitering round near them, and he stepped forward to ask the man why he had not gone to the hotel

when told to do so. As he left the party and moved toward the man, the latter suddenly turned and faced him. He saw in an instant that it was not the guide, and he asked the man what he wanted. There was no reply, and in an instant the figure had vanished.

The man returned to his party and was laughed at when he told his story.

Then the men and women went to the hotel. They found that their guide had been asleep for over an hour. Then they were puzzled. No other person had been near the cave, and nobody could explain the peculiar occurrence.

Next day the affair was discussed. A party was made up of men who agreed to go to the cave and see if the affair was repeated. They sat on the ground near the monument until 11 o'clock, when one of them grasped his nearest neighbor's arm and whispered, "Do you see that man?" at the same time pointing to a thick part of the wood near. All the men looked and saw the

ing by the group, and in an instant each man sprang to his feet. One of the men drew a revolver and shouted:

"If you do not stop and tell us who you are instantly I will shoot you! I give you fair warning."

There was no response. The man took aim and fired. He discharged the five chambers of his revolver, and then the party rushed to the spot where the figure had been seen. There was no body in sight, and after scouring the woods in every direction the men started toward the hotel.

Then the story came out. The colored people heard of it. They said that old Lewis wasn't resting easily in his new grave. Several of the more superstitious left the cave and could not be persuaded to come back. Many men and women saw the figure, and to this day they all know they saw a ghost.

Soon after this the ghost story became so widespread that the manager of the cave took an interest in it. He was asked by the negroes to put old

Lewis' bones back to their first resting place and thus lay the ghost, which everybody believed by this time to be that of old Lewis.

The manager did not like to give up his idea of the fitness of things to a superstitious belief, but finally the feeling grew too strong for him, and he yielded. He tore down the monument, broke it to pieces, moved old

Lewis' bones

an interesting and valuable exposition.

Chicago no longer gets the Centennial Celebration of the past week out of the way, but she begins to consider means for making the International Live Stock Exposition, to be held this fall, better than any ever held in the past. This, for Chicago, is no difficult to accomplish, for over $50,000,000 of live stock was handled at the Union Stock Yards last year, almost three hundred thousand carloads of live stock being received at the Chicago market during this period. This makes the city one of the greatest live stock centers in the world.

The International Live Stock Exposition has been an educational agency of the greatest value to those who have visited the show in recent years from the cattle ranges and feeding grounds of the west. These sources of supply are placed within easy reach of the city by such trunk lines of railway as the Chicago & North-Western, which brings to Chicago each year 70,000 carloads of live stock, raised and fed in the territory it reaches. The people living in this rich agricultural region, tributary to Chicago, are evincing each year more interest in the betterment of their stock. The exhibition at the Union Stock Yards during the International Exposition this fall will be one of the most notable ever seen, and its chief value will be along educational lines, looking to the improving of breeds and raising of standards, which means just so much more money in the pockets of the producer.

Fail particulars as to the program of the International together with the announcement of low railway rates via The North-Western Line will appear later.

Bank at Princeton Closed.

The Princeton State Bank was closed on Saturday by Bank Examiner Bergh, there being a shortage of $67,000 in the accounts of J. E. Leimer, the cashier. Leimer is under arrest for having embezzled this amount. Leimer was also vice president of the Montello bank and the failure of the Princeton bank has caused the Montello bank to be closed also. In speaking of the matter Bank Examiner Bergh said:

"This Princeton bank case is a brilliant example of one man banking. By one man banking I mean where the directors place all confidence in the cashier, and do not attend to their own duties of checking up everything he does. It also shows the danger of branch banking.

"The deficit of $67,000 is not all forgery, but we have absolute proof of the existence of $34,000 in forged paper; besides this there are two notes for $5,000 each that there is a strong suspicion are forgeries, but it would be difficult to prove, as the man whose name they bear is dead.

"While the total deficit is put at $67,000, a telegram was received just as I left Princeton that $10,000 would be recovered in a Chicago bank, and $3,000 came in today that was supposed to be lost.

"The branch bank at Montello holds enough of the forged paper to entirely eat up its capital stock. The first evidence I had of forgery I obtained in Colby. A citizen of that place purported to have his note for $5,000 in the Princeton bank. I went to Colby, hunted the man up and asked him if he had a note out for $5,000. He said no, and willingly made affidavit to the fact. It was this man's affidavit that I sprang on the cashier at the directors' meeting, and which was the first forgery he acknowledged.

"The cashier is under arrest on a charge of forgery, and I have also begun action for falsification of returns against him under section 17 of the banking law, so that I think he will have trouble in obtaining bail. I am on my way to Madison to have the attorney general draw up papers so as to put both banks in the hands of a receiver, and expect to be back in Princeton by the end of the week."

Rural Route Discontinued.

Postmaster Cole at Marshfield has received notice from the government to the effect that rural route No. 1 with headquarters at Marshfield will be discontinued on the 31st of October, owing to the fact that no person can be secured at the salary of $600 a year to drive the route, the present carrier having resigned.

There has been great deal of trouble experienced there in securing a man to run this route, some five persons having attempted to do so, but have resigned on account of the small pay. Trouble has been experienced in other parts of the state for the same cause and many resignations have occurred. When it is considered that a man and team can get employment almost anywhere now at from $4.00 to $4.50 per day, it is little wonder that a carrier cannot be found who will do the work and keep it up in all kinds of weather for half what he could make working elsewhere.

The route out of Marshfield supplies 200 families and is twenty-three miles in length, so that the carrier by starting at 9:30 in the morning seldom gets back home before night, and in a season like the past summer has been he has had many difficulties on account of bad roads. As the carrier has to keep two horses in order to do the work, after feeding them, keeping his wagon in repair and making good any losses that may occur in horseflesh, it can be seen that there is little left for him. The government allows only $600 as the salary for each carrier regardless of how much ground he has to cover and it can be readily seen that the job is not one that would lead to sudden acquirement of riches. The route at Marshfield was established two years ago, and by its establishment several small postoffices were discontinued, and the consequence is that many farmers will have to travel a long distance for their mail until these postoffices can be re-established.

WORK ON THE PAPER MILL

Consolidated People Now Making Good Progress
During Nice Weather.

Since the advent of nice weather the Consolidated people have been making good progress on their work wherever the high water has not interfered with them. As the water has got back to what has been the normal stage this summer, the company has again started in on the work of putting a cofferdam across the Buckskin Chute, and when this is finished the water of the river can be utilized for power purposes provided there is a desire to do so, or if the remainder of the mill is sufficiently finished.

For some time past there has been a gang of men kept at work nights and Sundays wherever the work could be carried forward profitably, and as a consequence much of the concrete floors have been laid in the machine rooms and finishing rooms.

The company received a narrow gauge engine about a week ago and this is being utilized to haul cars of rock onto the dam where it is dumped into the piers. The utilization of this engine expedites this work very much as it takes only a few minutes to haul three cars of rock up the incline and dump them. While the locomotive is a small affair and looks like a plaything compared with some of the big engines used on the railways, it seems to possess considerable power and climbs the hill to the top of the dam with comparative ease.

The drill sharpening device used by the company also saves a lot of work and enables the drillers to have on hand at all times a good supply of sharp tools. With the aid of this machine two men on Tuesday sharpened fifty-two drills in an hour. One man attends to the heating of the drills and another places them in the machine and attends to the working of it. The forge is blown by a bellows worked by a half horse power electric motor, so that one man's work is saved in this manner and a steady fire is always going.

The two pumping engines that were covered up by the high water some weeks ago are being fished out since the water went down sufficiently to show them above the surface, and it is probable that they will be rescued without having suffered a great deal of damage.

The iron casings for some of the water wheels have arrived and will be placed in position in a short while. These appear to be mammoth affairs when out in the open and are objects of curiosity to visitors to the plant.

The iron of the old mills that lay north of the present site has been sold to the Grand Rapids Foundry company. It is expected that there will be about fifty tons of this. It is being got out and broken up with dynamite by Frank Norton.

Shipped the Last Sheep.

George Taylor shipped the remainder of the sheep that had been fattening on his ranch south of the city on Monday, there being about 800 in the bunch, and the sheep were in good condition.

The experiment of shipping sheep to this country for fattening purposes has been found to be a success, and the consequence is that next year Mr. Taylor and his partner, Mr. Hoag, will do the work on a much larger scale. It is the opinion of Mr. Taylor, however, that much better results can be obtained by starting in here much earlier in the spring than he did this year, and thus gain the advantage of having his sheep eat the young tender grass, instead of starting them in on pasture that is old and comparatively dry.

During the winter Mr. Taylor will have a number of sheds and fences erected on his land so as to be able to better handle the stock next year.

Reduced His Sentence.

William F. Scarboro, the private in Co. F. Third United States Infantry, who was sentenced to death for assault while on duty in the Philippines, and whose sentence was later commuted to twenty years imprisonment, has been granted another reduction and will be released in February, 1904.

Scarboro was a member of Co. A. 2d regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, during the Spanish-American War, having enlisted at Marshfield, and is well known to the boys here who served in that company.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

Judge Webb Speaks Concerning the Action of the Electric & Water Co.

The following communication from Judge Chas. M. Webb was received last week by the directors of the Electric & Water company, and is self explanatory. There seems to be a general antagonism against selling the Electric & Water plant to the Consolidated people or of giving them the exclusive right to furnish the power for the plant. Following is Mr. Webb's letter:

Gentlemen: I have received, and am obliged to you for, a copy of the proposition of the Consolidated Water Power Co. to furnish your plant with electrical power. I have no knowledge whatever as to the amount of power required, nor as to what are most approved machinery equipment with which to deliver it, nor yet of the reasonable price, per horse power, which your company ought in justice, to pay. As to all such matters you will, of course, consult reliable experts in whose judgement you may safely confide. But of one thing I feel very confident. A proposition to furnish the necessary power to operate your plant for two years only, or for any short time, should not be accepted. It is or would seem to be remarkable that the Consolidated Company should limit its offer to a period of two years, and exact as a condition that it should furnish all the power you are to use in that time, if the Company has no ulterior purpose in view. You always have steam power and equipments sufficient to run your plant. It is hardly to be expected that you will retain that plant, acquired at large cost, and premit it to remain idle for two years. And it will probably remain idle if you keep it because if the Consolidated company can furnish you power as cheap or cheaper than you can furnish yourselves, they can and doubtless will furnish others who may want power, on like terms, during the brief life of your two years contract. If you do not retain your present plant, and shall be unable, upon satisfactory terms, to renew your contract with the Consolidated company when that proposed contract shall have expired, you will then be without power to operate your plant. Not only yourselves but the people of this city will, in the event supposed, be wholly at the mercy of the Consolidated company, or will be required for a considerable time to do without electric lights.

It is understood that the Consolidated company have been and are very anxious to acquire your plant, and to obtain a monopoly of the necessities which you are chartered to furnish the people of this city. Your duty and purpose is to furnish lights at cost. You have so far done so, and you have thereby rendered the people a most valuable service. You have thus demonstrated that it is possible for a community, in at least one respect, by co-operation of its members to provide itself with a prime public necessity without paying tribute to any third party, whether syndicate or trust. No departure from this policy should be tolerated for a moment. The Consolidated company will not engage in an enterprise which is to furnish power or light at cost. That company was organized to make money for itself. Its anxiety to acquire the exclusive right, now possessed by your company, to operate an electric light plant in this city, is because of its desire to do so at a profit to itself—and as much profit to itself as its patrons can be compelled to stand. Such is the history of all similar situations. You should not, of course, under any circumstances permit that company to acquire the monopoly which you now possess, nor any franchise to operate an electric light plant in this city, so long as the people may be desirous to operate one in their own interest. It is equally plain that you should not place it in the power of the Consolidated company to extort from you, and through you from the people of the city, unreasonable compensation for the power necessary to furnish the light which you are and will be required to furnish, and thereby greatly increase the cost to the people of the lights which they must have. The two years contract proposed, or any contract with the Consolidated company by which it shall furnish power for two years only, will undoubtedly bring upon your company, and upon the people who are its patrons at the expiration of the two years, the very consequences above mentioned, and the proposition was very likely submitted with that end in view.

No contract should be made with the Consolidated company to furnish power to light this city except for a very long term of years, and upon terms and conditions that will be clearly just to the inhabitants of the city who shall use electric lights, and that company should be required to give bonds, ample in amount with sureties of unquestionable responsibility, conditioned that it will fully perform the conditions of its contract, and will promptly pay specific and adequate damages for every failure on its part fully to perform such conditions. Neither your company nor the people of the city can afford to make any contract concerning the future lighting of the city, with any corporation or company whatever, which does not safeguard the public interests substantially and permanently. Very respectfully,

CHAS. M. WEBB.

BOGUS INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Commissioner of Insurance Sends Notices of Unauthorized Companies.

The following circular from Zeno M. Host, Commissioner of insurance, tells of unauthorized companies that are doing business in this state, and is self explanatory:

To the Public.

During the past few weeks numerous agents throughout the state have very kindly sent this Department circulars and postals received from the following unauthorized fire insurance companies and agents:

American Trust & Insurance Co., American Underwriters, Commonwealth Insurance Co., Fireman's Fire Insurance Co., Great Northern Insurance Co., Great Western Underwriters, Mercantile Fire Insurance Co., Northern Fire Insurance Co., and The Union Fire Insurance Co., all located in Chicago, Ill., Imperial Insurance Co., also located in Chicago, Ill. The Commonwealth Savings & Insurance Co. of Virginia, and The National Insurance & Investment Co. of Delaware; also E. A. Shanklin & Co., E. J. Summerhays & Co., Clinton S. Weeks, E. T. Marshall & Co., and Chas. Brock Jones & Co., all agents, are located in Chicago, Ill.

E. A. Shanklin & Co. wrote $3,000.00 insurance on property in Ashland Co. in October, 1902. The assured suffered a loss and was unable to collect one cent from the company.

Chas. Brock Jones & Co. placed some insurance in Sauk county. The assured also suffered a loss and was unable to collect from the company.

Any company that willingly and intentionally refuses to comply with the laws of this state, thus encroaching upon the rights of honest companies, should not be given the support of citizens of this state, or be trusted with their interests. To recover a claim against one of these unauthorized companies, the assured would have to bring suit in the state in which the company is organized.

Persons representing unauthorized companies in this state are liable to the assured in case of loss, upon the company's refusal to settle; but unauthorized companies cannot secure representatives, consequently, the assured has no protection under this law.

Fire insurance agents and the public are requested to send this Department all circulars, postal cards and leaflets which they receive referring to unauthorized insurance, and thus aid me in my efforts to eliminate wild cat insurance from this state. Respectfully, Zeno M. Host, Commissioner of Insurance.

Death of John McCamley.

John McCamley, one of the old residents of this section, died on Sunday morning from old age, being ninety-four years old.

Mr. McCamley was born at Newrey, Ireland, on the 16th of May, 1809, but removed to America some twenty years later, settling in Canada. He came to Wood county in 1857, settling in the town of Saratoga where he followed the occupation of farming until he removed to this city in 1888, since which time he has resided here. Mr. McCamley is survived by his wife, two daughters, Rose and Mary, and three sons, Peter, James and Edward.

The funeral occurred on Tuesday from the Catholic church, Rev. F. Van-Roosmalen performing the last rites, and the remains were interred in Calvary cemetery. The pall bearers were Hugh Goggins, Wm. Corcoran, Thos. Love, John McCarthy, George Howe and Charles Daly.

New Hotel Opened.

The new Dixon Hotel was formally thrown open to the public on Thursday evening, on which occasion a large number of our townspeople inspected the place and partook of the six o'clock dinner that was served.

The hotel is well lighted and presented a very handsome appearance the entire evening. About one hundred and thirty were served with dinner and expressed themselves well pleased with the service of the hotel.

The Grand Rapids band played outside during the evening and the Big Four orchestra rendered its choicest selections inside. Taken altogether the opening was a grand success, and Landlord Dixon is to be congratulated on having so fine a hostelry.

Davis-Martin.

Wm. W. Davis of this city and Miss Laura Martin of Port Edwards were married on Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. Davis will make their home in this city.

CHOICE MISCELLANY

Japan's Smart Set.

The smart set in Japan does not know its own mind. The Japanese are arrogant enough to prefer their own institutions to those of other countries. At the same time they wish to join the great powers, and to do this they must accept the fashions of the hated west, for in their hearts the Japanese do hate the west, though they are sharp enough to see that no nation which does not wear trousers can be a great power. So in Japan there are two smart sets, the breeched and the unbreeched, and as there are many Japanese who practice several religions so are there many who live two lives.

I had been with her about a month when one afternoon a cousin living ten miles away arrived with a horse and buggy and reported that his wife was at death's door. Aunt Mary instantly decided to return with him, and I was asked to remain all night in the house alone. It wasn't much of a test of courage, for hardly a farmhouse door was bolted at night and no one could remember when a theft of any consequence had been committed. I made no objections and half an hour later was left alone. Aunt Mary simply cautioned me about fire.

I had the cow to feed and milk, the chickens and pigs to look out for and the firewood to get in, and I was not feeling a bit lonely when night came on. Just before dark I saw some one banzing about the gate, but the fact gave me no uneasiness. The rule was to feed every tramp who came along and give him lodgings in the barn, and none of the fraternity had ever made any trouble. The man, whoever he was, did not come in, however, and I gave him no further thought. I had had my supper, put away the dishes and was popping corn when the kitchen door suddenly opened and in walked a man who addressed me with:

"Bob, I am Mr. Holt, the county sheriff. As I know that your Aunt Mary went away this afternoon I have called to see if that money of hers is all right. With you here alone the house could easily be robbed."

"I don't know anything about the money, sir," I replied, wondering how the man could have learned that it was in the house.

"But Aunt Mary didn't take a tin box with her, did she?"

"I didn't see her have any."

"No, sir, I don't."

"Well, we'll take a look around. Aunt Mary is a good soul, but she ought to put her money where it won't tempt anybody. There were two suspicious characters hanging around the village this afternoon, and I heard that they came in this direction."

I didn't question his being the sheriff and I didn't dispute his right to take charge of the money. I had no idea where the box was hidden, however, if there was a box, and so I could make no suggestions. The man entered the sitting room, and I followed. Five minutes exhausted the search in that room, even to pulling up the rug carpet on the floor and upsetting the lounge. There were but few places in any room in the house where anything like the box could be hidden.

In the parlor he simply gazed around, speaking very kindly to me all the while, but in the three bedrooms he made a close inspection of beds, bureaus and chests. In the course of half an hour he satisfied himself that the box was not on the first floor. There was a half story above, and he searched that and on descending the man began to growl and curse and finally said to me:

"Boy, we must find that box! I believe you know where it is hidden. If you don't eat with it at once I'll slice off your ears with my knife!"

He was so fierce about it that I told him I thought it was buried in the cellar. He ordered me to find a spade, and as he went down the cellar I carried a candle in either hand to light the way. The bottom of the cellar was not concreted and a part of the wall was formed of planks.

While I held the lights the man dug here and there or pulled down the bars and rolled the barrels about. I expected every minute he would find the box, for I had got the idea that it was down there, but after a long hour's search nothing was revealed.—Success

Reversed.

A wealthy golf enthusiast obtained permission from a farmer to use a meadow for his hobby. There he laid out links, and among the players were some ladies. A servant on the farm, scandalized by the sight of tall, athletic girls in scarlet coats, armed with iron-hoofed clubs, striding over the fields, one day reported to his master: "Them girls in the meadow scare our cows."

The farmer shook his head sadly while he uttered this profound remark: "Ah, Thomas," said he, "times is changed since we were young! Used to be the cows which scared the gals!"

Then Mr. Holt's patience gave out, and he showed himself in his true colors, though I had come to the conclusion that he was a robber. Seizing me by the arm and brandishing a wicked-looking knife before my eyes, he swore he would murder me if I did not reveal the exact hiding place. Had I known it I should most certainly have told him, but I did not know, and he was probably satisfied with the fact.

He wasn't willing to let me off altogether or thought he could continue the search without me. He turned and struck me a blow on the temple with his fist that rendered me unconscious, and when my senses returned I was tied hand and foot and lying on the cellar bottom. I heard him walking around on the floor above for a long time, but it was long after daylight before I dared move. I worked the cords loose after awhile, and it was just 8 o'clock when I crept upstairs and ran outdoors to give the alarm.

Aunt Mary came home at midafternoon to find half a dozen neighbors at the house and everything turned topsy-turvy. The real sheriff had been there and heard my story and gone in pursuit, but "Mr. Holt" had got such a long start that he was not captured. He was no doubt a bad man and a professional robber, but he had had his labor for his pains in trying to rob our house.

Where do you suppose that money was all the time? Not in a box at all, and neither down cellar nor upstairs, but in a bag and hanging to the poles in the kitchen along with bunches of sweetmeat and rings of pumpkin. The man was within reaching distance of it twenty times over. M. QUAD

The subject of land drainage has received a new impetus from the excessive rains of the last two seasons, and it is being discussed for the first time in many localities. The making of large open ditches to remove surplus water, or to make certain low lands available for crop growing is a branch of drainage that leaves no room for discussion, for its necessity is self-evident. But the matter of tile or other blind ditches is the branch of drainage that is being discussed, for about it there is a difference of opinion tho it is not easy to see how there can be. Everyone will admit that in an excessive wet season well-drained land would be the most productive and hence the most desirable, but it is feared by many that in a dry season the drainage would be a disadvantage. But, strangely enough, experience does not justify the fear. On the contrary, it has been satisfactorily demonstrated that lands well tile-drained stand drouth better than undrained adjoining lands of the same natural condition. The drained lands are in a better condition to absorb moisture from the atmosphere and to make available the moisture held in soil and subsoil. There is but little question that uniformly better crops are grown on drained lands, taking seasons as they run, and this fact has led to the conviction, in the mind of many, that it is better to increase the quantity of one's production of farm products by draining the acres he has than to buy more acres.—Farm, Stock and Home.

SOME TIMELY ADVICE.

How to Avoid Sunstroke and Heat Exhaustion.

The prevention of sunstroke and heat exhaustion requires absolute abstinence from alcoholic beverages, says Dr. Cyrus Edison in the New York American. We must avoid heated rooms, especially where the atmospheric conditions are bad. This means that we should not go to crowded places indoors. Heat exhaustion or sunstroke under such conditions may be required when the sun is not shining just as easily as during the day in the sun's rays. It is not the sun that does the harm, but the heat.

The commonest cause of sunstroke is, of course, overexertion in times of great heat, and by overexertion we mean overmental exertion as well as overmuscular exertion.

If sunstroke were a desirable thing for a man to get and I wished to cause an individual to have a sunstroke I would advise him as follows:

First—Borrow all the trouble you can, so as to fret and exhaust your mind, and then try to drown it with plenty of alcoholic drink. The kind is not essential. Any kind will do.

Second—Go to some crowded place of amusement the day before a hot spell of weather is expected and the following day keep on the sunny side of the street and exercise vigorously.

Third—Wear warm, uncomfortable clothing while doing this.

These directions by indicating what may cause a sunstroke show how one may avoid it by following just the opposite advice.

One of the best means of avoiding a sunstroke is to keep the body in a refreshed condition by means of a cool bath or arising in the morning and a brisk rubbing with a coarse towel afterward. This procedure refreshes and invigorates and enables one to go through a day fairly comfortably.

How to Dry Herbs.

Gather the herbs in the height of the season just before they begin to flower. Be careful to choose a fine day. Shake them free from dust and dirt, divide them into small bunches, cutting off the roots, and hang them across a line in the kitchen so that they can dry in a moderate heat. When perfectly dry put them in paper bags, label them and keep them on the kitchen dresser or any dry place. They will keep good till next year.

How to Clean Incandescent Mantles.

First remove the globe, then lift off the remaining parts and put on the table, says the New York News. Take off the chimney, then with a hatpin put about half way through the cord at the top of the mantle lift off carefully and place each end of the pin on the sides of a tumbler, the mantle hanging down the tumbler, and pour carefully over the mantle a little methylated spirits. Remove the fork, and with a soft brush clean the burner and replace the fork, then the mantle; then apply a lighted match to the mantle to burn off the spirit, as when new. Clean the chimney with a little of the spirits left in the tumbler, then the globe. Replace both, and you will have a beautiful, clear light, and your mantle will last for a few months longer. Be careful not to put the lighted match near the spirit.

How to Make a Curling Fluid.

To make a curling fluid take three drams of Irish moss, pull it into pieces, soak in cold water for two hours, drain and press quite dry in a cloth. Next boil it in one pint of water for fifteen minutes. Strain through muslin, and when cold add an ounce of alcohol to half a pint of the decoction. Shake well before using. Moisten the hair with this lotion and put up on curl papers.

How to Clean a Rain Coat.

This is an excellent way of cleaning the mud off your cloak. To take off the stains rub with plain warm water. Dip the garment in cold soft water; then with a scrubbing brush and yellow soap proceed to scrub it all over, having spread the garment flat on the table. When the dirt is removed, dip the coat in repeated waters to get rid of the suds, but do not wring it. Hang it up in the air or in an airy room to dry, but do not put near the fire. Paint or grease spots may be removed by scouring drops or spirits of turpentine, but common soap will do the rest. The dirtiest parts will require most scrubbing. In cleaning macintoshes always avoid hot water.

How to Clean Cucumbers.

Potatoes roasted in the pan with beef or mutton are known to be palatable, but not very many American cooks know that onions, carrots and even cucumbers are equally good cooked in this manner. Medium sized cucumbers are pared and salted and roasted with veal for half an hour. Carrots and onions are especially good with mutton.

How to Preserve Attar of Roses.

When one is fortunate enough to own a bottle of attar of rose, the genuine article, great pains should be taken to preserve its contents without evaporation. For this purpose the glass stopper should be removed and a close fitting cork substituted. Over this a piece of kid—a glove finger is excellent for the purpose—and the rich perfume will retain its fragrance for years. The genuine attar of rose, like the best olive oil, will freeze, affording proof of its purity.

How to Deodorize a Room.

Ground coffee roasted on a hot iron plate or hot coals, sugar burned on hot coals and vinegar boiled with myrrh and sprinkled on the floor and furniture of a sick room are excellent deodorizers.

Fortunate Fruit Fields.

Grand Rapids, Wis., Oct. 3.—The cranberry picking season in Wood county is now over. The quantity of berries harvested is about 18,000 bushels, amounting to a little more than one-half of the whole crop of the state. Some of the native berries have already been sold at $6.25, and some fancy imported varieties at $7 per barrel. The indications are that the prices will be a little higher than they were last year.

Gathering Their Crop.

Some of the growers began to pick in the last days of August, and there will be a few who will finish their picking in the first days of October. The work of picking requires no special skill altho in this, as well as in any other line, there is a great difference in the capacity of individuals.

The growers depend for the performance of such work mainly on the foreign population and the native Indians. Many of the latter drive from their reservations to the cranberry marshes in picking time, but of late years, both Indians and whites are largely carried in by the railroads on special rates made for the cranberry growers.

Hand pickers are growing less every year and harder to get. The early German and Polish settlers that settled in the vicinity of the marshes are getting their farms so improved that they find it more profitable to stay on their farms in the fall of the year, than they would to go out picking cranberries on the marshes. The hand picking is done almost exclusively by women, boys and girls. The men are usually employed in raking, and can always be had in sufficient numbers to gather the crop where it is possible to gather it by rakes.

The usual price paid to pickers is 50 cents a bushel, and a good picker will pick about three bushels a day. The rakers get $1.50 a day and board, and a raker will gather from eight to twelve bushels of fair average berries. Rakers have been known, this season, who gather as high as twenty-nine bushels in one day.

Quality Excels Last Year's Crops.

Altho the crop this year is not as large as last, the quality of the berries, both as to color and size, is better and the berries go into the cranberry house this year practically free from frost. The crop of Wood county will bring in over $100,000, and with the development of other lands could be made to bring in $1,000,000 a year. It is probably best that this development be brought about slowly. It is a dangerous business for one to embark in who has not had no previous training or acquired skill; it costs a great deal to make a good cranberry marsh, and with the want of skill the original investment is easily lost.

Poor Yankees the First Cultivators.

One jugged Connecticut Yankee, named John Webb, was first to cultivate the cranberry. Previous to 1857 the vines had grown wild in Ocean county, N. J., and no attempt at cultivation or preservation of the vines had been made by the growers. Somewhere about the year 1859 "One Leered John" landed in Ocean county, and between farm work and cranberry picking managed to eke out a sparse existence. John was a thoughtful man, and it did not take him long to figure out the difference between the cost of raising and the market price for the cranberry. He was a poor man, but by dint of close saving he managed to get together enough money to purchase an acre of swamp ground, and twenty years later he was a wealthy man.

England and other foreign countries were not slow in appreciating the delicious tartness of the cranberry and its peculiar adaptability to the turkey, which is another article of diet indigenous to the United States. Not less than one-third of the entire cranberry crop is shipped to foreign countries, and like our ever delicious apple the foreigners seem to get the pick. Notwithstanding this fact, although prices will rule high, we will not be deprived of our delicious cranberry jelly at our turkey dinners, which will soon be in season.—The Sentinel.

In the Chicago Record-Herald.

among the productions deemed deserving of being considered "poems worth keeping" is the following, together with a sketch of the author: William Lightfoot Visscher, born in Kentucky, educated in Owingsville and Danville, and graduated in law at University of Louisville. He has had a widely varied career, serving four years in the civil war, and traveled extensively, having been a potent factor in the building of several cities and three states. He has been a newspaperman for nearly forty years, and sometimes has been actor, humorist, lecturer, cowboy, judge and politician. He has written four novels, hundreds of short stories, and has published four books of verse—"Black Mammy," "Chicago, an Epic," "Harp of the South" and "Blue Grass Ballads"—besides contributing countless verses to newspapers and magazines.

Gentleman.

By William Lightfoot Visscher. He could not be so poor that he would hate the rich.

Nor yet so rich that he despised the poor; He is a gentleman and just that not a turn or two.

In all of Fortune's winding way could I find him to an act or thought of vile ingratitude.

He's true unto himself, and thus to every man.

And has that courage, high and grand

That comes with kindness, and, with honor, leads the van.

To aid the right and sternly punish wrong;

To strip injustice till it shivers, shamed and nude.

He sees no culture that, refining, gives a grace;

And comfort to himself and those around;

He has not ostentation, nor would he abuse

Himself to thus become a monarch

I have Extra Session of Congress.

President Roosevelt yesterday issued a call for an extra session of Congress. The object of the session is to act on the Cuban treaty. The president will convene congress on the 9th of November. There has been a great deal of speculation as to whether the president would convene congress in an extra session.

Cemetery Association News.

The season's work of the Cemetery Association has closed and the work there is a good example of how much good can be done by united efforts and by small contribution on the part feel of everyone concerned. It was a fact on generally recognized that our cemetery was a neglected place. About gave the first of May this year a Cemetery association was formed which conceived the idea that the cemetery and lots could be beautified and a man kept there during the spring, summer and fall provided enough persons could be induced to join and each paying $1.00 per lot. Many persons thought this was too small an amount but this plan was adopted and with the aid of a little extra contribution this method has proven a great success and worked a marvelous change on the appearance of the grounds.

Two men were employed in the spring and one man for the whole season. The work done consisted of keeping the grass cut on the lots, of the care of the plants. At spare moments a great deal of the grubbed out, wild grass and weeds were killed and the trees were trimmed. Mr. F. J. Wood also did a great deal which added to the general appearance of the grounds by cleaning up and taking care of the unsold property.

We would suggest that this work continue and that lot owners should inspect the work which certainly will make them enthusiastic to continue and induce others to join the association. Such united effort will make our cemetery one of which citizens can be justly proud.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS

Surprised the Women.—The members of the Woman's Relief Corps was given a pleasant surprise on Saturday evening by the members of the G. A. R. Post. The ladies of the Corps had assembled at the home of Mrs. Geo. W. Baker by invitation, and when all was in readiness the members of the post sent a detail to escort them to the G. A. R. hall where a very pleasant evening was spent. There was a program consisting of vocal and instrumental music, readings and speeches and very nice refreshments were served.

Working on Church.—A gang of men commenced the work of enlarging the Congregational church on Monday morning and should the weather be all favorable work will be completed in a short while. The auditorium of the church will be enlarged so as to increase the seating capacity considerably and a furnace will be installed.

After this is done the interior of the building will be decorated in a neat tasty manner, and it is expected that there will be a great improvement.

A Narrow Escape.—Burt Murray, who is employed by the Consolidated people, fell into the water at the Buckskin Chute on Friday while assisting in sinking a crib. The water was very swift but owing to the fact that he was a good swimmer he managed to catch hold of a rock where he remained safely until rescued by his companions. It was a narrow escape and might easily have resulted seriously.

Rode on Sidewalk.—Irving Henry

was arrested on Thursday for riding his bicycle on the sidewalk and being taken before Justice Cooper had to pay a fine of $4.45. For some time past there has been very little attention paid to the ordinance forbidding riding on the sidewalks and numerous complaints have been made to the police who say they will hereafter prosecute all cases that come to their notice.

Dr. Roberts Here.

Dr. W. P. Roberts, field secretary for the Wisconsin Health Park association, was in this city for a few hours on Monday, being on his way to Tomahawk where the association have located their health park.

Dr. Roberts has been in the southern part of the state for some time past soliciting aid for his association and reports that he has met with good success. The doctor was in this city the latter part of July, at which time a synopsis of the proposed work of the association was given.

The association was organized for the purpose of giving the consumptives of Wisconsin a chance to be treated by what might be termed the fresh air method. There are 1,200 deaths annually from consumption in the state of Wisconsin and it is Dr. Roberts' opinion that at least 50 per cent of this number could be saved if they were all given the chance to be treated by the method proposed by the Wisconsin Health Park association.

The association has 240 acres of land at Tomahawk of which about 12 acres have been cleared and the work will be carried on as rapidly as possible. Dr. Roberts is enthusiastic on the proposition of curing consump-tives by outdoor treatment, having been cured himself by this method some forty years ago, and it is his opinion that a great deal of good can be accomplished when once the health park is got in operation. Any person wishing information concerning the park can get it by putting themselves in communication with Dr. Roberts, whose permanent address is Janesville, Wis.

out on the Hemlock creek on Sunday.

about this fact, but that night,
while taking their paraphernalia from the wagon, Judge Conway was heard to ejaculate "Oh, Fudge," very forcibly, and investigation developed the fact that the judge's shotgun was missing, and it was decided that the weapon had been left lying beside the road when the party had embarked for home. It was 13 miles out and about 30 back and the judge says the weather was very frosty on Monday morning, but the gun was recovered.

Stevens Point Journal.—Thousands of people visited the scenes along the route of the cyclone in Pine Grove, Almond, Buena, Vista and Lanark Sunday. It was a beautiful Indian summer day and people came for many miles and from all directions to see the ruins. Many from this city were among the visitors. As yet the ruins remain almost as they were left by the storm except in the case of buildings which were slightly damaged. Some of these have been repaired.
Dead animals still lay upon the fields.

The sight was well worth the effort to see and none were disappointed. In fact the stories of the storm hardly conveyed an adequate impression of its severity. It will be a great many years before the traces of the storm will be obliterated, especially where it plowed its way through forests, uprooting, toppling over and breaking off the trees.

The New Arabian Nights

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

As soon as Dr. Noel perceived the dead man in the bed his face darkened, and, hurrying back to the door which he had left ajar, he hastily closed and double locked it.

"Up!" he cried, addressing Silas in strident tones. "This is no time for weeping. What have you done? How came this body in your room? Speak freely to one who may be helpful. Do you imagine I would ruin you? Do you think this piece of dead flesh on your pillow can alter in any degree the sympathy with which you have inspired me? Creditable youth, the horror with which blind and injus law regards an action never attaches to the doer in the eyes of those who love him, and if I saw the friend of my heart return to me out of seas of blood he would be in no way changed in my affection. Raise yourself," he said. "Good and ill are a chimera. There is naught in life except destiny, and, however you may be query and help to fix the guilt more certainly upon your innocence."

"I am then lost indeed!" cried Silas. "I have not said so," answered Dr. Noel, "for I am a cautious man."

"But look at this," objected Silas, pointing to the body. "Here is this object in my bed, not to be explained, not to be disposed of, not to be regarded without horror."

"Horror?" replied the doctor. "No. When this sort of clock has run down, it is no more to me than an ingenious piece of mechanism, to be investigated with the bistouri. When blood is once cold and stagnant, it is no longer human blood. When flesh is once dead, it is no longer the flesh which we desire in our lovers and respect in our friends. The grace, the attraction and the terror have all gone from it with the animating spirit. Accustom yourself to look upon it with composure, for if my was forced down upon this unusual baggage, and the trunk was locked and corded by the doctor's own hand, while Silas disposed of what had been taken out between the closet and a chest of drawers.

"Now," said the doctor, "the first step has been taken on the way to your deliverance. Tomorrow, or rather today, it must be your task to allay the suspicious of your porter, paying him all that you owe, while you may trust me to make the arrangements necessary to a safe conclusion. Meanwhile, follow me to my room, where I shall give you a safe and powerful opiate, for, whatever you do, you must have rest."

The next day was the longest in Silas' memory. It seemed as if it would never be done. He denied himself to his friends and sat in a corner with his eyes fixed upon the Saratoga trunk in dismal contemplation. His own former indiscretions were now returned upon him in kind, for the observatory had been once more opened, and he was conscious of an almost continual study from Mme. Zephyrine's apartment. So distressing did this become that he was at last obliged to block up the spy hole from his own side, and when he was thus secured from observation he spent a considerable portion of his time in contrite tears and prayer.

Late in the evening Dr. Noel entered the room carrying in his hand a pair of sealed envelopes without address, one somewhat bulky and the other so slim as to seem without inclosure.

"Silas," he said, seating himself at the table, "the time has now come for me to explain my plan for your salvation. Tomorrow morning, at an early hour, Prince Florizel of Bohemia returns to London, after having diverted himself for a few days with the Parisian carnival. It was my fortune, a good while ago, to do Colonel Geraldine, his master of the horse, one of those services, so common in my profession, which are never forgotten upon either side. I have no need to explain to you the nature of the obligation under which he was laid; suffice it to say that I know him ready to serve me in any practicable manner. Now, it was necessary for you to gain London with your trunk unopened. To this the custom house seemed to oppose a fatal difficulty, but I be thought me that the baggage of so considerable a person as the prince is, as a matter of courtesy, passed without examination by the officers of custom. I applied to Colonel Geraldine and succeeded in obtaining a favorable answer. Tomorrow, if you go before 6 to the hotel where the prince lodges, your baggage will be passed over as a part of his, and you yourself will make the journey as a member of his suite."

"It is probable enough, for the prince loves to mix with all societies," replied the doctor. "Once arrived in London," he pursued, "your task is nearly ended. In this more bulky envelope I have given you a letter which I dare not address, but in the other you will find the designation of the house to which you must carry it along with your box, which will there be taken from you, and not trouble you any more."

"Alas," said Silas, "I have every wish to believe you, but how is it possible? You open up to me a bright prospect, but I ask you, is my mind capable of receiving so unlikely a solution? Be more generous and let me further understand your meaning."

The doctor seemed painfully impressed.

"Boy," he answered, "you do not know how hard a thing you ask of me. But be it so. I am now inured to humiliation, and it would be strange if I refused you this after having granted you so much. Know, then, that although I now make so quiet an appearance—frugal, solitary, addicted to study—when I was younger my name was once a rallying cry among the most astute and dangerous spirits of London, and while I was outwardly an object for respect and consideration my true power resided in the most secret, terrible and criminal relations. It is to one of the persons who then obeyed me that I now address myself to deliver you from your burden. They were men of many different nations and dexterities, all bound together by the same purposes. The trade of the association was in murder, and I who speak to you, innocent as I appear, was the chieftain of this redoubtable crew."

"What!" cried Silas. "A murderer? And one with whom murder was a trade? Can I take your hand? Ought I so much as to accept your services? Dark and criminal old man, would you make an accomplice of my youth and my distress?"

Without replying, Dr. Noel turned toward the bed and proceeded to examine the corpse.

"Quite dead," he murmured. "Yes, as I had supposed, the pockets empty; yes, and the name cut off the shirt. Their work has been done thoroughly and well. Fortunately, he is of small stature."

Silas followed these words with an extreme anxiety. At last the doctor, his autopsy completed, took a chair and addressed the young American with a smile.

"Since I came into your room," said he, "although my ears and my tongue have been so busy, I have not suffered my eyes to remain idle. I noted a little while ago that you have there in the corner one of those monstrous constructions which your fellow countrymen carry with them into all quarters of the globe—in a word, a Saratoga trunk. Until this moment I have never been able to conceive the utility of these erections; but then I began to have a glimmer. Whether it was for convenience in the slave trade or to obviate the results of too ready an employment of the bowie knife, I cannot bring myself to decide, but one thing I see plainly—the object of such a box is to contain a human body."

"Surely," cried Silas—"surely this is not a time for jesting!"

"Although I may express myself with some degree of pleasantness," replied the doctor, "the purpose of my words is entirely serious, and the first thing we have to do, my young friend, is to empty your coffers of all that it contains."

Silas, obeying the authority of Dr. Noel, put himself at his disposition. The Saratoga trunk was soon gutted of its contents, which made a considerable litter on the floor, and then, Silas taking the heels and the doctor supporting the shoulders, the body of the murdered man was carried from the bed and, after some difficulty, doubled up and inserted whole into the empty box. With an effort on the part of both the lid

"At the same time," resumed the New Englander, "as you confess yourself accustomed to this tragic business and the people to whom you recommend me are your own former associates and friends, could you not yourself undertake the transport of the box and rid me at once of its detested presence?"

J. P. Roe in Farmers' Sentinel.

With but few exceptions the crop of 1903 of Wisconsin apples promises to be small in quantity and poor in quality. The biennial tendency of our orchards is generally recognized, and this is the off year. Where a tree carries but a light burden of fruit we might naturally expect fruit of extra size and quality. Singularly with us, the opposite is the case.

On visiting a Duchess tree in our home orchard that on the bearing year, as a rule, is loaded with fine fruit, we found a measly showing of miserable specimens, gnarled and shrunken—punched by the apple gouger out of all recognition. A singular feature of the off year is the proportion of stung, distorted and wormy fruit to the sum total. This is as large as ten comparatively worthless, to one perfect specimen, instead the latter are exceptionally rare. Of wormy fruit where the trees are neglected and no spraying is done, the actual amount of wormy apples may be greater than on the off year, but they are not noticed in the abundant supply. In the bearing years, however, the amount of fruit affected by the apple gouger is less. Why this should be so we do not know. The reason is too deep for our philosophy, unless that with so big a job in sight on the bearing year, the prospect is discouraging and the villain with the stiletto forgets to stab the young growing fruit.

Our business just now is the gathering and keeping of what we have. This is more necessary because of the limited supply. We are now approaching the period of the apple harvest such as it is.

Gathering.

First, as to the time of gathering; and just here we would urge upon our readers, the advisability of early picking in preference to late. There is the obvious fact that much will be thus saved that would otherwise be windfalls. An early start in picking allows opportunity of going over the trees repeatedly, selecting first with care the more advanced and mature specimens. The stepladder should be brought into use and the hand picking done carefully. Careless handling and the use of the ordinary ladder would thrash off more than is gathered. As mentioned in a previous article, the tree relieved of part of its burden is free to concentrate upon the rest, thus by two or three pickings, much finer crop is saved in both quality and size.

There is yet this further reason for early gathering. Fruit left to ripen on the tree does not keep well, the tendency is to become overripe and decay. Hence it is a rule with our commercial orchardists, so soon as the fruit is sufficiently colored up, to commence picking. While it is generally admitted that the apple is king of all the fruits, yet it is astonishing how little pains many of our farmers bestow upon gathering it. It is frequently the case that they are shaken off the tree, gathered in heaps, a part to be fed to the stock, a part goes to the cider mill, and what are considered the best are dumped into barrels for winter keeping. As a rule before winter sets in they are played out from premature decay, occasioned by the method of handling. There is a temporary surplus, a short lived enjoyment, and then except what may be purchased for some special occasion, the family use of the apple is over.

Now, this might be easily remedied. Instead of a fall feast and a winter famine, let us have a winter's supply. This is well within the reach of every farmer who has an orchard where a part of the trees are of varieties known as winter apples—those which, maturing late, are long keepers. If the farmer's orchard has been well selected at the start, with a due proportion of winter varieties, such as the Willow Twig, the Walbridge, and the Golden Russet, he has the right material to begin with, for it should be understood that under ordinary conditions a fall apple will not prove a winter keeper.

Selection.

The nit becomes a matter of gathering, selection and storing. In gathering, let it be careful hand picking—what is worth doing should be done well. Second the bruised, the wormy, the inferior and speckled should be rejected. The old adage of what one rotten apple does for its neighbors in the barrel should be remembered. The fruit that should grace your table and furnish enjoyment winter evenings, when the snows are drifting and the windows rattle with the wind without, should be of the finest specimens of the stored sunlight and dews of summer.

Storage.

This brings us to the matter of storage. If barrels are your choice, use a small sized measure or basket that you can fit down readily to the bottom in filling, and do not fill it too full, so as to spill its contents until carefully poured out. Too often the filling is carelessly or thoughtlessly done, the fruit dumped in so that those first poured in are bruised by the fall. These soon decay and communicate the rot to the rest, and the farmer wonders why his apples don't keep.

With careful handling and the barrel properly headed up, in which process the fruit is pressed down firmly to prevent the rattling in the barrel when moved, the barrel may make a good package. We would suggest a box about the size of the common cracker box. We mention this because it furnishes a clean package. The apple readily absorbs a taint. A drop of kerosene let fall upon an apple ruins it for eating—we have tested this unpleasantly. When a box is used the apples can and should be placed in by hand, and if choice and designed for special use and long keeping each apple should be wrapped in tissue paper like an orange. Place a layer of paper on top, nail the cover down, mark the name of the variety on the box, and the boxes may be piled away for winter.—Milwaukee Wis.

The ordinary cat-tail found growing in marshy places are being gathered and turned into a profitable crop by W. A. Wittier of York county, Me. Last year Mr. Wittier shipped several hundred barrels of cat-tails to Europe, where they are used for stuffing pillows, and are considered superior to feathers for this purpose. Cat-tails are gathered in the fall, and must be carefully handled in order to dry them perfectly, and prevent heating, as that spoils them, and they often have to be handled over twice a day. The down is packed in barrels with a heavy press, and an ordinary flour barrel will hold 23 pounds ne. Mr. Wittier says regarding his operation:

"I usually go to any place where they grow in plenty, first get permission of the owners of the land on which they grow, to gather them, then hire as many men as the quantity to be gathered will warrant, and set them to work. I always overset myself. Two years ago I gathered at Saybrook Junction, Ct., about ten tons. I employed about 20 men. Last year I gathered in Maine. There were none there the year before. —Orange Judd Farmer.

Important If True.

The agricultural department is inquiring into the statement of Consul General Richard Guenther that a new plant has been discovered in South America which promises to supplant the sugar cane and the sugar beet. Scientifically the plant is known as the Eupatorium rebaudianum, and it contains a large amount of saccharine matter, and a high percentage of natural sugar properties which are easy to extract. According to Mr. Guenther, a lump the size of a pea will sufficiently sweeten a cup of coffee.

Just Be Glad.

Oh, heart of mine, we shouldn't Worry so!
What we've missed of calm we couldn't
Have, you know!
What we've met of stormy pain,
We can better meet again,
If it blow.
For we know not every morrow,
Can be sad;
So, forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears,
And put by our foolish tears,
And thru all the coming years,
Just be glad.

A lady in costly mourning attire was walking in a street in Vienna the other day when she saw a beggar woman with three children, one of them a girl of two, sitting at the foot of a monument. She sent a street porter to ask if she would give up the girl. The woman nodded, whereupon the lady in black walked up to her, gave her some bank notes and took the child to a store. Half an hour later she emerged with the same child elegantly dressed, hailed a cab and drove away.

LEWIS' GHOST

Away back, when the big Mammoth cave in Kentucky was discovered, the first man to explore its depths and who was known as the first guide to the cave was a slave named Lewis. One day it was rumored that there were two entrances to the cave. This meant that the receipts from visitors would be divided, as the two entrances were on different estates. The man who owned the one entrance, the land on which it was and the guide Lewis was quietly told one day by the old man that he had discovered the second entrance to the cave. Lewis' owner at once told him he would give him his freedom if he would show him and another man the second mouth to the cave.

Lewis agreed to do the job. One morning the slave entered the mouth of the cave—the present entrance, by the way. The arrangement was that the owner and another man were to remain on guard and see that the old slave did not come out the way he had gone in. Ten hours later old Lewis proved that there was another entrance to the cave. He had used it as an exit and come to his owner over the hills. That night three men are said to have silently effaced this entrance, and, although it is known in the neighborhood of the Mammoth cave that it did exist, no man has to this day been able to find it, so there is only one entrance to the wonderful cave.

Years rolled on. Lewis died. He was made free, but he would not leave the cave. He explored it fully and knew more of its mysteries and beauties than any other soul. Then he was buried in the old cemetery up near the hotel.

Now for the ghost story. A new manager took hold of the cave and the hotel there. He heard about old Lewis and his wonderful history. So he concluded it would be a good idea to dig up the old fellow's bones, reinter them at the mouth of the cave and erect a tall white marble monument over them sacred to the memory of the first guide to the cave.

When the old man's grave was opened, the negroes down there say, his widow went down into the pit and gathered up the fragments of bone and placed them in the new coffin. Then they were placed in the new grave at the mouth of the cave, and the monument was erected over them.

One night in the summer a few years ago a party of men and women, six in number, came out of the cave at 9 o'clock. They looked at the big monument and talked about old Lewis. Then they told the guide to go on to the hotel. They were in no hurry and would loiter about the mouth of the cave. An hour and a half later they started to go to the hotel.

They had gone but a few steps when, a few yards in front, they saw a man. He was dressed in a white shirt and dark trousers and wore no hat. One of the men remarked casually that the guide had been loitering round near them, and he stepped forward to ask the man why he had not gone to the hotel when told to do so. As he left the party and moved toward the man in the latter suddenly turned and faced him. He saw in an instant that it was not the guide, and he asked the man what he wanted. There was no reply, and in an instant the figure had vanished.

The man returned to his party and was laughed at when he told his story. Then the men and women went to the hotel. They found that their guide had been asleep for over an hour. Then they were puzzled. No other person had been near the cave, and nobody could explain the peculiar occurrence.

Next day the affair was discussed. A party was made up of men who agreed to go to the cave and see if the affair was repeated. They sat on the ground near the monument until 11 o'clock, when one of them grasped his nearest neighbor's arm and whispered, "Do you see that man?" at the same time pointing to a thick part of the wood near. All the men looked and saw the figure of the night before. It was floating by the group, and in an instant each man sprang to his feet. One of the men drew a revolver and shouted:

"If you do not stop and tell us who you are instantly I will shoot you!" I give you fair warning."

There was no response. The man took aim and fired. He discharged the five chambers of his revolver, and then the party rushed to the spot where the figure had been seen. There was nobody in sight, and after scouting the woods in every direction the men started toward the hotel.

Then the story came out. The colored people heard of it. They said that old Lewis wasn't resting easily in his new grave. Several of the more superstitious left the cave and could not be persuaded to come back. Many men and women saw the figure, and to this day they all know they saw a ghost.

Soon after this the ghost story became so widespread that the manager of the cave took an interest in it. He was asked by the negroes to put old Lewis' bones back to their first resting place and thus lay the ghost, which everybody believed by this time to be that of old Lewis.

The manager did not like to give up his idea of the fitness of things to a superstitious belief, but finally the feeling grew too strong for him, and he yielded. He tore down the monument, broke it to pieces, moved old Lewis' bones back to the cemetery, and from that time to this no ghost has been seen.
